Although the main character Michiru is trying to find her way in a simple world, she continues to be haunted by the ghosts of her past. Past events that can't be explained even by the crutches of time seem to be playing tricks on her, and they start to have a real effect. It's only after her first big audition that she comes to realize that she has a past that is lying in wait for her, and it can pull her back into an endless loop of regrets and sadness. Part 2: As the exulted battle heats up, the witch clan gains access to a "Fatal Witch's Touch" that will shake the fate of the world. With Michiru in a bind, and her actions affecting things she has no control over, the Witch's Touch will force a choice between her and others and it might be too late to make up for any mistakes she might have made.

PPP's new "Turkey" poll finds that Romney leads Obama 49-44 in the state. However, it was the most recent competitive poll within the state. From December 3rd to 4th, we found Obama ahead of Romney 49-45. PredictIt, the state's most popular betting site, currently sees an average of an Obama win over Romney coming in at 52.1. Turnout, which historically drives both of these kinds of races, was 60.6 percent in the last official election, and at the end of last month dropped to 59.9 percent. It's possible that turnout spiked this time, but it may have tailed off a bit since. We've looked at PA many times before, including most recently in July. Romney's and Obama's respective advantages in PA have ranged from razor thin (Dem) to as much as nine points (GOP). The only time that one of them has ever led the state by more than a point has been late in the 2008 cycle, when Obama led McCain 50.8-48.2. In Pennsylvania, Romney is up 49-45, Obama is at 47-48, and Libertarian Gary Johnson gets 1.9 percent.

Construction of an asymmetric biotinylated antibody fragment by the C-terminal biotinylation of a scFv with a biotinylated peptide and subsequent specific biotinylation of the peptide with an antibody fragment. A number of biotinylated antibody fragments have been successfully constructed and have found important and diverse uses. A method of generating asymmetric biotinylated antibody fragments is described. In this approach, the C-terminal biotinylation of the scFv was accomplished by the introduction of a biotinylated C-terminal amino acid followed by reaction of the biotinylated peptide with the antibody fragment. Finally, the peptide was specifically biotinylated in the biantidinium-based moiety by reaction with biotinyl-N-hydroxysuccinimide ester. The biotinylated antibody fragment showed as much affinity for avidin as the unmodified antibody fragment. No change was observed in the biotinylation pattern of the antibody fragment and its affinity for avidin upon proteinase digestion. The asymmetric biotinylated antibody fragment was used to generate an immunoaffinity column for the detection of a specific antigen. The immobilized antibody fragment could be used for over 40 consecutive assays. The method of asymmetric biotinylation is applicable to a wide variety of antibody fragments.

of the back door and he caught sight of the other boy. Tim felt a rush of air, as if someone had grabbed him by the back of the neck. He looked to see what was wrong and glimpsed a glimpse of green pajamas and matching green slippers as Michael walked quickly down the hall. Tim looked around and there were no adults in sight. He rushed down the hall after his brother. "MICHAEL, WAIT!" Tim caught up

What's new in Scoregasm:

The spaciousness of how small our universe is...when everything looks alike and feels alike, you might think of our universe as an iceberg...the visible portion is small compared to what is under, and to what is under is even smaller. We are so invested in us that we have trouble grasping these grand truths. Our universe was created in a single event, 13.8 billion years ago. Most of the universe and most of us as well, have been here since. None of us have changed its appearance or size or volume since then. (p12) What does that mean about our universe and our lives when nothing we experience is clearly distinguishable from any other? I try to explain to my wife about our universe's one sixth page size. She seems to catch my meaning when I begin to describe to her our universe as the number 120. But she is only concerned by how big infinity is and further, in her mind, sizes beyond how big this infinity might be. In this order of things...when we try to quantify how sparse our universe, she becomes irritated because my logic refuses to read off exactly how little our universe is, and we fight because our notions are different. I ask her what is your definition of infinity? Her definition would be problematic when she is forced to use it as a starting point for my own. But she ultimately gets it when I tell her where we are, and that since creation has not changed, we are such a tiny part of it. That's well enough for now. It is self-contradictory to talk about our finite minds when there are so many self-evident truths that are as infinite as this moment. (I.e., you open your eyes on this page, this tiny part that is this page). I read that the Black Hole theory suggests there is nothing beyond this point. Beyond this point, there is nothing to do with it, and its total density is infinite, just a point. "Our minds, limited to calculate how there are only a handful of atoms of starlight at every point in the universe, find themselves incapable of grasping the immensity of existence beyond our present cosmic neighborhood." (p. 56) I've never understood why many cannot grasp or have trouble grasping that this tiny universe is only one tiny part of a much bigger universe of vastly unpredictable proportions. It is an example of oversimplifying a complex reality.
