Resistance to cisplatin remains a challenge in the treatment of non-small cell lung cancer (NSCLC). Herein, we fabricate ternary system consisting of mesoporous silica nanoparticles (MSNs), cisplatin and thiopeptide TH1403, and evaluate their in vitro cytotoxicity against lung cancer cell lines (A549/DDP). The epithelial injury associated with cytotoxicity results in increased expression of cell cycle arrest genes. The ternary system is more effective in terms of inducing cell cycle arrest. Compared with MSNs, the ternary system is selectively taken up by A549/DDP cells. More importantly, the cellular uptake of MSNs is significantly reduced when co-loaded with cisplatin and TH1403. In A549/DDP cells, the cytotoxicity of TH1403 is inhibited by the previously used chemotherapy drug cisplatin and the growth of lung cancer cells can be easily arrested in G0/G1 phase. We also present the mechanistic insights of TH1403 induced apoptosis via the type II cell death pathway. In conclusion, our findings indicate that the combined delivery of drugs via a single carrier system is a novel strategy to overcome resistance of NSCLC to chemotherapy, and the results are a promise for the development of novel and effective cancer therapy.Boston Dynamics' humanoid robot Atlas has been taking to the streets, visiting schools to share the way it moves with a 3D printer and other promotional material. But in a new video released this week, Atlas walking and climbing down a ladder — both human-like and somewhat cool — quickly raised an uneasy feeling within a certain section of the robotics research community. It's hard to say what exactly triggered the feelings from a video that is far less advanced than the first iteration of the robot's service model, but the robot

That's because it is so easy to make a mistake. I've been a student in every stage of education for more than 50 years now, and have seen this first-hand. From my experience, most people who are sending out their personal statement (or scholarship application or application for employment) get it wrong and waste their time and efforts. This is an article I wrote to help you when you are trying to get accepted into a university or college. The school I am speaking of is Yale and it is one of the most highly-respected and most rigorous universities in the world. I have not tested their personal statement requirement for any other college or university, so I cannot state this for them. However, I have written this section to help you to write your own personal statement from the perspective of a “typical” high school, college and university applicant. Remember I said that writing an applicant's personal statement for a university or college admission is one of the hardest things you will do in your life? Well, I can't imagine how hard it is to write an application for a university that requires you to write a personal statement, but this is not an easy task. It's very easy for a writer to get intimidated and give up. But in my experience, after more than 50 years of dealing with and helping students who have done all this, here is what I have
