To understand and treat these illnesses, clinicians, researchers, and policy makers need access to valid and reliable information about the prevalence, severity, and causes of co-occurring disorders. The proposed study will use experimental methods to examine the relationships among gender, stress, coping, and emotional well-being. Emotional well-being will be assessed with a newly developed self-report instrument. Respondents will report their level of stress, coping, and self-reported emotional well-being, and will complete tasks to demonstrate the cognitive, affective, and behavioral components of emotional well-being. A probability sample of 450 black and 450 white adult volunteers living in Humboldt County, California, will be screened to identify subjects with a depressive disorder, anxiety disorder, panic disorder, drug addiction, and alcohol abuse. The mean scores on the experimental measures will be compared among subgroups of subjects defined by the presence or absence of co-occurring disorders. Regression equations will be computed to obtain predictors of emotional well-being among subjects with co-occurring disorders and to determine whether the magnitude of these predicted differences is equivalent to those found for respondents with only one disorder.Olympic massage Massage therapy - a form of treatment based on the manipulation of
